Brisbane International Film Festival (BIFF) 2004 Music Program
BIFF WILL ROCK YOU!

Brisbane International Film Festival's Music Program is back again, just like The Eagles! Featuring a series of fresh and inspiring fiction and documentary style films, BIFF's 2004 Music Program will keep even the most highly strung music and film lovers happy.

Couldn't make it to Neil Young's most recent tour? Well stop sulking and get down to BIFF for a screening of Neil Young's very own film Greendale, from the concept album of the same name.

Want something a little heavier? Perhaps the revealing and intriguing documentary Metallica: Some Kind of Monster is more your style.

Hailed as the last great rockumentary of its era, Festival Express, will also travel across BIFF screens this year re-telling the drunken and hazy story of one infamous 1970 tour. Featuring Janis Joplin, The Grateful Dead, the Band, Jerry Garcia and many more, the film follows these musicians as they embark upon a whistlestop Canadian tour.

Female musicians make a mighty appearance in the US feature Prey for Rock n Roll. Festival director Anne Demy-Geroe says that "the film provides an interesting gritty, female-centric view of the music industry". Dealing with issues faced by many women in the music industry Prey for Rock n Roll focuses on almost-forty, LA punk-rocker Jacki as she journeys through the film plagued by the common aging-unsigned-rocker question, when is enough enough?

With a series of fictional and documentary style films on offer this year's diverse program will appeal to more than just your typical converse clad music fanatic. "These films are a reminder of just how important music and art are in our lives and the lengths artists go to, to achieve greatness" Demy-Geroe said.

Your ears may not be ringing when you leave the cinema but your mind will surely be a buzz.
